50 SHADES OF SUMMER

When on holiday, nothing should hold you back – forget the rules and experiment with colour

Whether you're striding down Fifth Avenue or relaxing on Bondi beach, two facts are certain: you're on holiday, and no one knows who you are. It's the perfect time to break free from your routine and dabble with colour and as always, the runway has provided plenty of inspiration.

Blue ruled Spring/Summer 2016. Lucia Pieroni did vibrant slicks of cobalt blue wrapped around the entire eye at Jonathan Saunders, Pat McGrath created "butterfly wings" at Diane von Furstenberg by lacquering wet aquamarine shimmer around the eye, and Val Garland drew graphic bolts of cyan and green across the lid at Monique Lhuillier. When asked what drew her to those particular shades, Garland replied, "Because it suits everybody – those colours predominantly work on every skin tone."

More shades that rocked the runways: at Alexis Mabille eyes were decked out in chartreuse shadow with a vibrant swipe of pink blusher from the cheekbones to the temples. Lips went pure gold at Prada, and neon icy pink at Michael Costello. There were orange swoops below the brows at Giambattista Valli, and Dick Page smudged white cream pigment in an exaggerated wing at Zero + Maria Cornejo. With colours going rampant this season, there really is no excuse – leave your makeup inhibitions at the boarding gate and go a little nuts. □

EDITOR'S TIPS

Always keep the rest of the face to a minimum when wearing bright eyeshadow. Fresh skin and a swipe of nude lipstick are plenty.
