Escape with style and the right skincare arsenal in tow—whether you're headed for the ski slopes or a jungle trek in the hot n' humid tropics, here's the stash you need for looking as good at touchdown as you did at takeoff TEXT SHANTILA LEE

Surf's Up

Frolicking on a beach in Bali or Bondi gives you that much sought-after sun-kissed gleam, but keep in mind that exposure to sun reflecting off the sand and water could also bake and burn you a crispy red, and harsh sea winds are known for triggering fine lines and premature ageing. When packing for paradise, stock up on waterproof high SPF sunscreens for the face and body, slather it on everywhere and reapply every two hours post-pool or a dip in the sea. Add a toss-in-your-beach-bag size stick lip balm for healing dried out, chapped lips (soaking in sea water also helps), a whitening cleanser and an exfoliating body scrub for restoring a beach-worthy glow.

Coldplay

Snowboarding on the snowy caps of St. Moritz or trotting the streets of New York shod in Louboutin ankle boots in the dead of winter, while very appealing, can really wreak havoc on your skin: plummeting temperatures, extreme dryness and blustery wind chills break down the skin's moisture barrier, resulting in parched, irritated skin. So unless you aspire to cracked lips, dry, peeling skin and ruddy cheeks, pack super-hydrating skincare that'll pep your skin back to health—start by bumping your moisturiser up to a creamier emollient and incorporate a thick, lustrous body lotion into your daily regime. Layering a serum under cream is key to locking in moisture, so switch to a moisturising serum that penetrates deep to re-plump skin from within and exfoliate with a gentle radiance-infusing scrub two to three times a week, post-showering, for better serum absorption and to stave off flaking.

Hot to Trot

Humidity kicks your oil glands into overdrive and skyrockets you into a massive-pores-and-breakout-hell. In a nutshell. If you're en route to an exotic, far-flung getaway in an Asian country with a humid, subtropical climate, get ready to sweat it out and do battle with congested pores. Caring for your skin in perennially hot climates requires a major overhaul: substitute your regular moisturiser with an ultra-light, oil-free gel kind that infuses skin with smoothness, sans clogging. Opt for an astringent toner that has antioxidants to expel excess oil (swipe at least twice a day), tote a face mist for a quick invigorating, nourishing pick-me-up, and lug a truckload of high SPF sunscreen for protecting your skin from burning. When showering, opt for icy cold water that locks in moisture and an exfoliating body scrub at least twice a week to remove dead skin cells and give your skin a breather. A major don't for when things get hot and sticky—nix wearing heavy, high coverage foundation that'll slide off your face in a sweaty, icky mess; instead, opt for primer and a super sheer, natural lightweight tinted moisturiser for that healthy, radiant glow that'll keep you afloat the entire holiday.
