ANNIE LENNOX

Back in the day when Lennox was part of the Eurhythmics, she was known for three things: that Sweet Dreams song, her short orange crew cut and bold flashes of makeup in thick, graphic swipes. Here, we've toned down one of her classic pink-eyes-purple-lips looks with a swipe of purple eyeshadow, a bash of silver pigment in the inner corners, a hit of bold pink blusher from the cheekbone to the temples, and totally funky purple lipstick to match.

BLONDIE

Blondie's iconic frontwoman, Debbie Harry, notorious for her fearless New Wave sound and that platinum bob, had an unmatched makeup mojo that always cantered on all-around eyeliner, an angular flash of bronzer and a good slathering of semi-matte red lipstick. Which is still totally doable today; try a satiny, full-on intense lip colour, eyeliner in a deep brown and a whopping dose of creamy bronzer.

BANANARAMA

Anyone who remembers bopping in the 80s to Cruel Summer would also recall Bananarama's plastic-pop-gone-serious dark smokey eyeshadow and brownish-red lipstick. Instead of having jet-black eyeshadow going all the way to the brows, which can be a little passé unless you're an 80s girl band, try this season's runway fave – gunmetal silver, up to the browbone and around the bottom lashline, with a glob of glossy umber lipstick.

SHOUXSIE SHOUX

The voice of legendary pop-goth band Siouxsie and the Banshees, Siouxsie Sioux's outré makeup look, graphic eyeliner permutations and mad brows all in, is not for the faint at heart. This is a toned-down but still-punky take on the look: to bordeaux red lips and generously filled in brows, add a thick flick of black gel eyeliner to the upper and lower lid, smudge it a little and add silver eyeliner from below the lashline to around the inner corner.

NINA HAGEN

Hailed as the 'Godmother of Punk,' Nina Hagen's one makeup combo that stuck through the ages is the resolutely artful Evil Queen look she had in the German movie Sieben Zwerge. Here, we've given it a Naughties twist: blue eyeliner below the lashline, Hagen's signature smack of turquoise eyeshadow in a flare from the upper lid to just above the brows, juxtaposed against her staple neon-bright, punchy orange lippie.
